

The Swan Children's Lullaby

The emerald isles of the Celts roll green and misty between a silver sea and soft grey skies, dotted with thatched roundhouses, ancient oak groves, and rings of humming standing stones. Mist drifts over still lochs, and across it, just out of sight, lies the Land of Youth where no one grows old. The isles are full of gentle wonders: a playful shapeshifting faerie, an old, bright salmon, a shy selkie of the loch, and four children long ago turned into singing swans. Here a hero is not the strongest or the loudest, but the one who is full of ideas, listens kindly, and keeps a promise. The grandest deeds are done with imagination and courage and a kind heart, and even a fearsome-seeming stranger, met with a friendly word, often turns out lonelier than it is unkind.

The answers are here. This part is for the grown-up, not for the child.

Show the matching picture in the Atlas as you reach each place.

★ Read aloud, slowly and warmly. Stop often to let the children answer. There are no wrong answers here, only brave new ideas to try.

Before you begin

Every dusk, four white swans sing a little song over the Misty Loch. Their lullaby lifts the mist and paints the sky rose and gold. But tonight the song goes wobbly. It forgets its tune. A sad grey mist settles over the loch and over the whole village, and nobody can see the sunset.

Old Maeve the Tale-Weaver calls you to her by the warm hearth. "You two have heads full of ideas and kind hearts," she says. "Will you help the swan children remember their lullaby, so the mist lifts again?"

She gives you three gifts: the little harp, a sprig of oak, and a honey oatcake. Then she smiles. "Here we do not win by being the strongest. We win by being brave, kind, and full of ideas."

★ What is your hero name? Are you a hero of Imagination, of Courage, or of Kindness?

Stop 1 The Grey Mist

You walk down to the loch. The grey mist is so thick you can barely see the water. Somewhere out there are the four swan children, but they are quiet and hidden.

★ How will you find them? Could you stand very still and listen? Could you call out softly and kindly, so you do not frighten them? Try something and see.

When you draw near, gently and kindly, four white shapes glide out of the mist. Four swans with soft, sad eyes. They are pleased to see a kind face. They let you come close.

Stop 2 Remembering the Lullaby

The swan children want to sing, but they have forgotten their lullaby. The words have all jumbled up. Three little verses float in the mist, out of order, and the song will not work until they go back the right way.

Pook the Puca, a playful faerie, peeks out of an oak and gives you a wink and a hint.

★ Can you help them put the lullaby back together? Listen to each verse. Which one comes first? Which one comes last? You can talk it through together.

When you set the three verses in the right order, the swan children's eyes light up. "That is it!" they whisper. "That is how it goes!"

Stop 3 Playing It Together

The swan children know the words now, but they are shy. One little swan is the shyest of all. She opens her beak, and no sound comes out. She tucks her head under her wing.

This is not a fight. How could you help her feel brave? You have the little harp. Could you play a gentle tune for them all? Could you tell the shy swan she is not alone, and sing along so she does not sing by herself?

When you play the little harp and sing with them, the shyest swan lifts her head. A small, sweet note slips out. Then another. Soon all four are singing together, strong and clear.

The Dusk Turns Rose

The lullaby rises over the Misty Loch, just as it used to. The grey mist softens and thins. It melts away into rose and gold, and the sunset pours over the water.

Up on the green rise, the Ring of Standing Stones hums along, low and happy. The swan children glide in a circle, singing their hearts out. And high above the loch, Danu the Kind looks down and smiles at you.

You did it together. You were brave, you were kind, and most of all, you were full of ideas. Goodnight, heroes. Sweet dreams.

The Swan Children's Lullaby: Rules for the Grown-Up

The Guide for the Grown-Up explains how the whole game works; read it first if this is new. This page holds only what is special about this story. A failed roll is never a defeat; nobody loses. This is a gentle tale: nobody is ever frightened for long, no one is hurt, and good ideas and kindness win every time.

Setting up

- Print the map. Each player puts a small figure on the Start, the Roundhouse.
- This world has no magic. Instead each hero leans on one or two of the five qualities: Imagination (dreaming up ideas), Courage (a steady heart), Kindness (caring for others), Curiosity (noticing what others miss), or Patience (waiting and trying again). On the hero sheet, where it says magic, let each child write the quality they like best. Two different qualities work best together.
- Give each player five energy stars (five small tokens or bricks). They are spent and refilled during play.
- Set out three props if you can: anything at all for the little harp, a leaf or twig for the sprig of oak, and a small cake or token for the honey oatcake. Anything can be anything.
- Keep your dice and the dice-band table from the back of the kit beside you.

The Twist of Fate

Once at each place the players may roll for a twist; read the matching line. The Guide explains how it works.

Roll	Twist of Fate
1	Pook the Puca pops up and gives you one free hint.
2	You find your courage again, and take back one energy star.
3	A soft breeze drifts off the loch, and the next challenge is Easy.
4	The Salmon of Wisdom blows a lucky bubble. All is well.
5	A sprig of oak for luck: keep one roll to use again later.
6	A burst of birdsong, and for a moment everyone feels brave.

How it ends

There is no foe in this tale at all, only four shy swan children who have lost their song. The story is won not by beating anyone but by drawing near gently, helping the swan children remember their lullaby, and then playing the little harp so they find their voices again. The shyest swan finding her note is the heart of it; let that moment land. When the song returns, the mist lifts into rose and gold, the Ring of Standing Stones hums, and Danu the Kind smiles. See the puzzles page for the three challenges and their solutions.

The Swan Children's Lullaby: Puzzles and Solutions

For your eyes, not the children's. Each stop lists its band, what the players need to work out, the intended solution, and a gentle fallback so a stuck child always moves forward. More than one good idea should work; reward imagination and kindness over the "right" answer.

Stop 1: The Grey Mist (Easy)

The challenge. A thick grey mist hides the four swan children on the loch. The players need to find them and draw near without frightening them away.

Intended solution. This is a Kindness and Observation moment. The good, kind move is to slow right down: stand still and listen for a ripple or a soft feathered sound, then call out gently and warmly so the swans know a friend has come. Loud or sudden approaches make the swans shrink back into the mist; a calm, kind one brings them gliding out.

Fallback. If the children are unsure, have a single white feather drift to their feet, or let the smallest swan give a quiet call they can follow. Any gentle, kind approach works, and once the swans see a friendly face they come close on their own.

Make it simpler. For a little one, play a quiet game of tiptoe-and-whisper: creep softly and say "hello, swans" in your gentlest voice, and the swans glide out to meet them.

Stop 2: Remembering the Lullaby (Normal)

The challenge. The swan children have forgotten their lullaby. Three short verses are drifting in the mist all out of order, and the song will not work until the players put them back the right way.

The verses. Read them aloud in a jumbled order, then ask the children to sort them. Number them only for yourself.

1. Soft falls the dusk on the silver loch, little ones, rest your weary wings. 2. Up lifts the mist, all rose and gold, and the ring of old grey stones still sings. 3. Sleep now, sleep, till the morning sun wakes the world with the song it brings.

The ordering clue. Tell the children the lullaby travels through one whole night: it starts at dusk, rises through the dark, and ends at the morning sun. The words that name the time of day give the order away: dusk comes first, then the mist lifting in rose and gold, then the morning sun last. So the right order is verse 1, then verse 2, then verse 3.

Intended solution. This is a Memory and Vocabulary moment. The players listen for the time-of-day words (dusk, then the rising mist, then morning) and use them to set the verses in order, dusk to dawn. Asking Pook the Puca for his hint works just as well.

Fallback. If the children are stuck, have Pook the Puca hum the first line, or point out the words "dusk" and "morning" and ask which one comes earlier in a night. Getting there with help still counts as a full success and tops up an energy star.

Make it simpler. For a little one, use just two verses: read the bedtime one and the morning one, and ask which we sing first when it is time to sleep.

Stop 3: Playing It Together (Normal)

The challenge. The swan children know the words now but are too shy to sing, and the smallest swan is shyest of all. She cannot find her voice on her own.

Intended solution. This is a Social-emotional and Courage moment. The players lead the song rather than waiting for the swans: play the little harp to give them a tune to follow, sing along so no swan has to begin alone, and offer the shyest swan a kind word so she knows she is not on her own. When the players go first and stay beside her, she finds her note and the others follow.

Fallback. If the children freeze, or wait for the swans to start, have the shyest swan whisper, "Will you sing it with me?" The moment the players hum any tune at all and invite her in, her first small note slips free and all four swan children join the song.

Make it simpler. For a little one, hum "la-la-la" together and ask the shyest swan to add just one "la" of her own; that single note is enough to start the whole song.

The ending

There is no battle and no loser, and there never was a foe, only four shy swan children who had lost their song. When the lullaby returns, the grey mist lifts into rose and gold, the Ring of Standing Stones hums along, and Danu the Kind smiles down on the loch. The heroes have won the only way anyone wins here, by being brave, kind, and full of ideas.
